What To Do

Here are the facts (Printed to clarify and remove any doubt of bitterness or bias on the part of the author):

1. Jason R. Clark, that's me, was "fired" (not to be confused with laid off) from Goldman Sachs in 1995 (nothing securities related). Truth be told, I am an entrepreneur, and like virtually all entrepreneurs a terrible "employee". To all of my past bosses who have "fired" me, I say, "Thank You, Thank You, Thank You!!!!" Bar none the absolute best thing that has ever happened to me - not once, not twice, ok....lets move on to #2.
2. Not all people on Wall Street or at Goldman Sachs are bad. There are many individuals and firms on Wall Street that are some of the smartest, most talented, most successful in the investment world. However, far too many are not, and these people may be in charge of your money.
3. I am not claiming to be the messiah of the investment world. However, I am claiming to be different than the vast majority of people in this business. Now more than ever the first question you should ask when looking for a financial advisor is - Can I trust this person? The second question is - Is this person competent? The last question is - Is this person passionate? You combine all three, and you will never have to "worry" about money ever again.
